BATH PENITENTIARY

AND

LOCK HOSPITAL.

THE Committee, in cheerful obedience to the rules of the Institution, have to lay before the Subscribers an account of its state and progress, since its establishment on an enlarged scale in July last. The time, however short, has not passed without some occurrences of sufficient interest to be offered to the notice of the Subscribers.

It is not now necessary to bring forward arguments in support of the principles on which this Institution is founded; but if proofs were wanting of the general opinion of its utility, they would be found in the unexampled extent of the subscriptions; among which are some of the most illustrious names of the kingdom, and those of many other distinguished persons who, though wholly unconnected with this city, have thought this particular charity terms, for twenty-one years, with a power to extend the term to twenty-one years more at the expiration of that term ; and also to purchase at any time at the price paid by him :—an instance of generous attention to the interests of the Institution which cannot fail of being duly appreciated by the Subscribers.

The House in its present state being much too confined for the formation of a Lock Ward, sufficiently separated from the rest of the building, and possessing the requisite accommodation for the patients ; the adjoining building, lately let as a stable, has, together with an extensive garden, been resumed, and is now converting into the necessary apartments. The whole of the proposed building and alteration are contracted for with Mr. CAVE, at something less than £300. And it may be expected, that much profit, as well as convenience, will be derived from the produce of the garden to both parts of so numerous an establishment.

Since the month of July, Twenty Females have been admitted, of whom seventeen have been fully received into the Penitentiary : and it is with feelings of the highest satisfaction, in which all the friends of this Institution will participate, that the Committee are authorised to declare that no doubt is entertained of every one of those now under its protection being ultimately restored as useful members of society: And to shew that this opinion is not lightly formed, it may be necessary to observe, that some one of the Ladies of the Committee is in attendance every day ; that the whole of the select Committee meet at least once in the week ; and that the attendance of the Chaplain is frequent and regular; so that the conduct of every inmate may be said to be subject to constant inspection. It may, indeed, be remarked, that in this instance benevolence is not much exposed to imposition, for as the first entrance and subsequent residence are equally voluntary acts on the part of the applicant, the very disposition to remain in a state of seclusion and occupation so different from her recent habits, and to listen to instructions and admonitions of the gravest nature, is of itself a strong proof of that frame of mind on which lasting reform and good conduct may best be engrafted.

An Institution, however, of this nature cannot be expected to furnish periodical statements of great and frequent examples of success. The reformation it proposes to operate can only be the fruit of long and steady perseverance in the administration of moral and religious instruction, under the influence of retirement and constant employment: but the result of these efforts must depend on the character, principles, previous habits, and early education, of their objects. As the prize is of inestimable worth, so must the race be long, and the struggle difficult.

Penitence may be produced by so many causes, operating, however, forcibly and sincerely, yet only for the moment, that a long trial and a complete change of life and manners must be gone through before a sufficient pledge for future good conduct can be secured; and even then a situation must be sought, in which she may again commence her new and better life, before she can be dismissed from the care of her protectors. For it is one of the most pleasing and distinguishing features of this Institution, that the cares of the Ladies who direct its internal concerns,—with a gentleness and judgment, a zeal and assiduity, which are above all praise,—do not terminate till their objects are provided with the means of subsistence, either with their families or in service, where they can be safely sheltered from the obloquy which attaches to their former conduct.

It is not, therefore, in a few months from its establishment, that any permanent instances of its good effects can possibly be produced or expected; yet even in that short time cases have occurred of the most interesting description, which were beyond the reach of any other charity, and have found immediate and substantial relief from this. It is not fitting that the particulars of the individual cases should be exposed to the public observation; but it may be permitted to state, that it has given to the repentant child of poor but honest parents, a shelter from the criminal pursuits of her betrayers, which their poverty and occupation precluded them from affording her.—It has enabled another to find a secure refuge from an impostor by whom she had been deluded.—And it has afforded an asylum to a third young victim of arts and practices, with which her early age could not contend.—It has received a fourth in the most deplorable and desperate state of disease, at the age of 15, in which she had lain in utter neglect for many months, without any kind of assistance—without sufficient food or decent cloathing. The extraordinary care and skill of the Professional Gentleman, who devotes his time and talents to the service of this charity, and the unremitting attention on the part of the attendants, have at length restored her to health; and the dreadful lesson of the suicide of her former companion, of the same age, on the very night of their separation, has made a deep and it is hoped a lasting, impression on her mind.

It is not among the liberal supporters of this Charity that hearts will be found insensible to the gratification arising from these facts, which establish, beyond all argument or opinion, the utility, and indeed the moral necessity for an establishment, which has already received so many unfortunate women; all too young to be depraved, but too friendless and too inexperienced to recover their place in society; and who must have sunk, at the very threshold of life, into the worst and most degraded state of existence, but for the shelter and support which has been afforded them, till instruction and reflection shall have fitted them to run their course anew, with firmer principles and fairer hopes.

Where, in truth, can be found any exercise of the holy virtue of Charity, which embraces a larger proportion of its sacred duties, than that which raises the diseased frame and desolate heart from its sepulchre of misery and despair;—recalls it to life, and light, and being;

—connects it again with the charities of human nature, from which it had been an outcast;—shelters it from scorn and reproach; provides for its necessities in this world,—and does not forsake it till it has removed the cloud which obscured the prospect of a better.

With these impressions of the invaluable benefits arising from this Institution, the Committee, with respectful confidence, submit its claims to the support of the Subscribers and the Public.

Bath, 4th March.

JOHN PARISH, Chairman.
